

DIGGS TRIAL BEGINS TODAY; CAMINETTI'S CASE WILL FOLLOW

Escapade With Sacramento Girls Caused Democratic Scandal.

FORCED PROSECUTOR TO QUIT

McNab Left Service Because Attorney General Permitted Delinquent Trip to Reno With Proctored Girls by the Two Married Men Resulting in Arrests.

United Press Telegram.
SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 5.—Maury L. Diggs of Sacramento, who today before District Judge William C. Van Fleet charged with violation of the Mann white slave law. The trial grows out of the escapade in which Diggs, Frank D. Caminetti, Lola Morris and Maudie Warrington figured recently.

Diggs and Caminetti are charged with taking the girls to Reno, Neb. Both of the girls were in court when Matt Sullivan and Theodore Roche, assistants of Attorney General McReynolds, moved the opening of the case.

The trial is expected to last a week, and upon its conclusion Caminetti will be brought to trial on a similar charge. Following the Caminetti trial, Diggs and his attorney were tried on the charge of suborning perjury.

The escapade to Reno of Caminetti and Diggs with Lola Morris, 19, and Maudie Warrington, 20, aroused social and political circles of California as they have not been aroused in years. Frank D. Caminetti is the son of United States Commissioner General of Immigration Anthony Caminetti. Maury L. Diggs was formerly state architect. The men, posing as bachelors, met the two young girls at a social function given by the society to which the girls belonged. They called and were well received by the parents of the girls, who were flattered by the attentions of these men who were able to entertain them more lavishly than the youths more nearly their own ages.

Then when the men had attached themselves to the lives of the girls, they revealed their real intentions. They admitted they were married, and told stories of domestic infidelity and plans for divorce. At first resentful the young women were won over and looked forward to the time when divorce would permit the men to marry them. But this plan of waiting was upset when the men told them that their wives had learned of their plans, and had decided on court action which would involve the four in a scandal. The girls then decided to follow their suit, fell into the trap and after much pleading by the two men, decided to elope to Reno. There the men would obtain divorces and there would be a double wedding.

On the evening of March 19, the four met at a Seattle hotel and took the Overland train for Reno. The girls declare that even on that evening they begged the men to go to their parents, confess all and ask their advice. They did not want and once they were on the train they caused to object to the elopement. The four occupied one stateroom to Reno, where the four registered at a hotel.

The girls' father that evening, learning of the elopement, and learned of the elopement. They swore out warrants. Diggs was charged with contributing to the dependency of his minor child. Caminetti was charged with contributing to the dependency of the second child, a five weeks old baby. After a search of two days the men and girls were found.

It was decided by the authorities that the case was one for the federal courts. The men were indicted for violating the Mann white slave law. At the grand jury investigation here, another angle of the case cropped out. Then United States District Attorney John L. McNab, produced on the stand Nellie Horton, a nurse, who swore that Charles B. Harris, a Sacramento attorney retained by Diggs, had approached her in an effort to have her see the Warrington and Morris girls and induce them falsely to state a story that Diggs and Caminetti occupied separate quarters from them in the Reno bungalow, and that their relations had been entirely proper. On the story of Miss Horton both Diggs and Harris were indicted for an attempt to suborn perjury.

The angle of the case was brought to the attention of United States Attorney General McReynolds as a reason for the prompt trial of the cases against Diggs and Caminetti. Because McReynolds ordered the cases delayed until autumn, McNab resigned. McReynolds postponed the cases at the request of Secretary of Labor Wilson, who said he made the request on behalf of Caminetti's father.

Following the McNab-McReynolds episode, and when it was indicated that by President Wilson's order a new special prosecutor would proceed with the Caminetti and Diggs cases, District Attorney Warrington of Sacramento, a warm partisan of McNab, summoned the Sacramento county grand jury, which voted new indictments against both Diggs and Caminetti for the abandonment of their children. Bench warrants were at once returned for the indicted men and Warrington announced that independent of the federal prosecution, the pair would be proceeded against in the local courts. Both gave bail when arrested.

CITY HALL IMPROVEMENTS WILL BE URGED ON COUNCIL

Borough Building in Bad Need of Renovation. Solutions are Told; Snyder Street Paving.

Improvements to City Hall will be recommended to Town Council at the meeting on Thursday. Burgess J. L. Evans has taken the matter up with councilmen. Several rooms in the building need repairs badly. In the burgess' office, paper on the ceiling is loose, while in the court room there are long cracks in the plaster.

The interior of the building needs repainting. The dust and smoke from the railroad has given the rooms a dingy appearance.

The paving of Snyder street will also be brought at the meeting. A contract was awarded to Bernard O'Connor several months ago, but it is called for macadam. A petition from the property owners, asking that the street be paved with brick, resulted in O'Connor agreeing to surrender the contract and council's decision to have the street with brick. A contract for this work, however, has not been awarded.

To settle the question of removing the steps at the Schmitz building, Councilman S. L. Decker declares that he will introduce a resolution to instruct the burgess and street committee to remove obstructions from all sidewalks.

FRENZIED FOREIGNER ATTACKS CONDUCTOR ON A WEST PENN CAR

Flourishes a Knife but is Overpowered by the Crew.

BROUGHT TO THE LOCKUP HERE

Chief of Police Hatcher of Fayette City, a Passenger, Takes Him in Charge After Motorman and Conductor Eject Him at Shady Grove.

E. A. Thomas, a foreigner, is being held at City Hall to await the result of an investigation being conducted by West Penn officials to determine whether he was intoxicated when he flourished a knife in a street car and threatened to murder Conductor W. H. Gore. Gore and Motorman Phil Moore put him off the car at Shady Grove after a struggle, where he was arrested by Chief of Police J. B. Hatcher of Fayette City.

Thomas boarded the car at Uniontown, intending to come to Connellsville. When Gore made his first trip around collecting fares, Thomas tried to board a second car, from which the conductor took five cents. At the end of the first five-cent ride, Gore made his second round of the car, and it was then that Thomas threatened to kill him. The foreigner declared that he had paid his fare in full, pulled a long, black-handled knife from his pocket and made a lunge at the conductor.

Gore stopped the car and, with the assistance of Motorman Moore, overpowered Thomas and put him off at Mount Pleasant, where he was a passenger. He was unable to lend Gore assistance, however, until the car stopped and Thomas reached the ground. Then he placed him under arrest and brought him to Connellsville.

FEARS CHINESE MILLS

Senator Oliver Points Out Dangers in Their Methods.

WASHINGTON, August 5.—Both Senators Penrose and Oliver lectured emphatically in the tariff debate yesterday. The Pittsburgh Senator devoted himself to the metal schedule, which is denounced as threatening disaster to the iron and steel industry. He pointed out the danger because of its sharp cuts in rates in metal products and especially its provision placing pig iron on the free list.

Senator Oliver declared that in framing the metal schedule, the Democrats had evidently aimed their reduction shots at the United States Steel Corporation. He predicted that the steel would pass over that corporation, moving it into the hands of a few foreign interests, and would spread disaster among the smaller independent steel and iron producers.

A feature of the iron and steel schedule which Senator Oliver stated was even more menacing for the future than competition from England or Germany was the threatened competition from China and Japan. He said steel was now being made in China in mills of the most modern construction, and owing to the cheapness of labor there, was being turned out at a far lower cost than was possible in this country.

AFTER THE SNOBS

Senator Kern Wants Navy Enlisted Men to Have a Chance.

United Press Telegram.
WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—Transferring his fight against snobbery in the navy from his committee room to the floor of the Senate, Senator Kern, leader of the upper body, today searching for direct evidence to strengthen his case.

Kern charges that enlisted men are not given an opportunity to secure advancement in the navy. When they are candidates for examinations, the officers give them snubs, which, if they pass successfully, are usually marked failures because they fail to make ten points for "adaptability."

Kern says that the officers have their own bias in which an enlisted man is not permitted to participate because of this, enlisted men are not "adaptable."

DIES AT 102

Somerset Woman Kept Advanced Age Concealed From All but Friends. Special to The Courier.

SOMERSET, Aug. 5.—Somerset county comes to the forefront with an unknown, heretofore all unknown, Mrs. Elizabeth Baker died yesterday afternoon at her home in two miles of Somerset, aged 102 years.

Miss Baker, even in her later years, true to the traditional reluctance of her sex, never revealed her extreme age, but her nearest relatives knew her secret well, and the family records confirm the fact. She was a year older than Levi Shumaker, the Berlin centenarian, who died recently at the age of 101, and she was, by two years, the senior of Mrs. Mary Masdaine Criss of Trent, who celebrated her 100th birthday anniversary on May 16 last.

Miss Baker was a native of Somerset county, but passed most of her life at Mount Pleasant, with relatives. She returned to Somerset county 18 years ago to live with the family of her nephew, Alexander Casheer, where she died. Her remains will be taken to Mount Pleasant for interment.

CANDIDATES SCARCE WITH THE PRIMARY ONLY MONTH AWAY

Complications are Promised at the Election This Year.

LOCAL SITUATION IS COMPLEX

Decision in the Clark Bill Test is Awaited With Interest; Assessors Begin Work of Enrolling Party Preferences of Voters in County.

With the primary election but little more than a month distant, the political situation here remains as quiet as if it were a year removed. Because of the complications which have resulted as a consequence of the late suit over the Clark bill, prospective office-seekers are holding aloof, awaiting the decision of Judge Van Swearingen, which may clarify the situation or make it worse than ever. If an appeal is taken to the Supreme Court, it cannot be argued until October, a month after the primary election should have been held to choose the nominees.

Pottsville, which occupied virtually the same position as Connellsville with regard to the Clark bill, stands out as a quiet as to its force and effect. Candidates there have begun their campaign and are soliciting support for various offices. Apparently the Clark bill will be tonight's big drawing card.

City candidates here have just three weeks in which to file their papers. August 26 is the last day for petitions to reach the commissioners. Several persons who are interested in political affairs here, although not particularly active, have expressed the fear that matters will be delayed until it will be too late for a satisfactory campaign.

In other parts of the county, candidates are making progress. Petitions are being circulated, and the men who want offices are beginning their round of handshaking. Local officers are to be elected this year.

An appeal of a decision of the board of supervisors to be elected by the voters of the county, who are to be named on a non-partisan basis. In the county there are two county commissioners, two jury commissioners and state committee members to be nominated.

Compared with the situation two years ago, when it was learned there would be no city election only after candidates had filed their petitions, there appears to be little interest this year. Several prospective candidates have been gossiped about but none has made formal announcement of his candidacy.

The school directors are to be elected in Connellsville. The terms of A. W. Bishop and W. W. Smith expire. Their successors will be chosen for six years. It is expected that both incumbents will have opposition, both for the nomination and election, although no one has yet announced his candidacy. School directors are elected on party ballots.

Assessors throughout the county are now at work enrolling the voters according to party preference. The assessors are required to have the work completed by September 3, and to be at the polling places on September 2 and 3 for the purpose of registering voters who appear for that purpose.

ROBBERY AT REIDMORE

Two Men Ransack Summer Home of Colonel J. M. Reid.

Burglars entered the summer home of Colonel J. M. Reid at Reidmore Sunday evening, and after ransacking the place, left without taking anything of value. The house is vacant this summer, and when Colonel Reid visited it yesterday afternoon he discovered the burglary.

Entrance was gained through a bathroom window. The window was forced open with a pair of ice tongs, which were also used to break open the locks on three doors leading to the various rooms.

The men, apparently there were two of them, were evidently searching for valuables. Colonel Reid's desk in his den was forced open and the contents scattered about the floor, and cupboards and closets were entered.

The East Side viaduct is being repaired. Street Commissioner Strouffer began work on the bridge yesterday but on account of a shortage of lumber was unable to go on with the work today.

CONNELLSVILLE DAY AT SHADY GROVE BIG EVENT

Street Cars Carry Many from Town to Popular Amusement Resort.

Connellsville Day at Shady Grove today is one of the most popular events of the season at the popular amusement resort. Scores of persons from Connellsville and surrounding towns went to the grove early this morning with their baskets filled, and are spending the entire day there.

Joe Nirella's Pittsburgh band of 25 pieces arrived in town this morning, and after playing until after noon continued on their journey to the park. The band is one of the features of the amusement program.

This evening special cars will be run between town and the park. The West Penn has made special arrangements to accommodate heavy traffic, and cars will leave every few minutes. Returning, the service will be more rapid than usual.

Augmented by many additional attractions, the park today presents a particularly inviting place to spend the day. Manager Coyle has secured several new bands which were set up yesterday. The new side is one of the great favorites much enjoyed by the children. It vies with the ever popular merry-go-round and the shoot-the-shoots for favor. The fireworks display will be tonight's big drawing card.

M'CARTHY TO STICK

President Tressler Says Connellsville Has Reconsidered Resignation.

After absconding himself from the meetings for several weeks, J. J. McCarthy has reconsidered his resignation and will attend Thursday night's meeting of South Connellsville Town Council. President J. M. Tressler is credited with this statement.

Two months ago, McCarthy resigned. He announced his intention verbally and left the meeting. The resignation was not accepted.

The council is getting affairs so shaped that they will have less difficulty in holding meetings. With all of the members back into the fold and a majority instead of two-thirds attendance making a quorum, postponed meetings should be rare.

On Thursday night several matters are on the calendar for consideration. Chief among them are the conditions of several streets which need repairs. There appears to be little interest this year. Several prospective candidates have been gossiped about but none has made formal announcement of his candidacy.

The school directors are to be elected in Connellsville. The terms of A. W. Bishop and W. W. Smith expire. Their successors will be chosen for six years. STRIKE AT SLIGO

Puddlers Quit Because of Disagreement Over Wage Scale.

The plant of the Sligo Iron & Steel Company is idle today. The puddlers struck yesterday, and the plant will shut down until the differences are settled. The puddlers demand a wage increase over the scale adopted the middle of July by the Western Maryland Association.

The new wage scale is higher than the one under which the men were paid previously to July. On account of the number of times the material has to be heated the rate on strong iron was voluntarily increased by the company.

What effect the strike will have on the plant during the remainder of the summer months is conjectural. With the puddlers out, the company is unable to operate the furnaces and the plant remains idle.

"We are paying the men as much as the work is worth, and all we can afford," declared an official.

STORES JAMMED BY SHOPPERS; BARGAIN DAY A BIG SUCCESS

From all Parts of the Region Come Visitors Who Buy Liberally

ADDITIONAL CLERKS KEPT BUSY

In Most of the Stores They are Served Lunch by the Firms Rather than Losing the Time to Go Home; Biggest and Best Bargain Day Yet Held.

With every store crowded with patrons eager for the bargains which have become a watchword among shoppers, the fourth annual Bargain Day one of the Connellsville merchants opened with a rush this morning and continued throughout the day.

Merchants declared that the crowd this year was much larger than last, which means a new record for Bargain Day. Like a holiday crowd, the visitors spent liberally. They came prepared to buy and it was not difficult to find something which pleased the eye and suited the purse. Before the stores had opened for the day, shoppers began to gather, and they continued coming.

Virtually all of the merchants had engaged additional clerks. The Wright-Metzler Company, in addition to hiring a number of former employees, brought a delegation of salesmen from the Mount Pleasant store. All of the stores could have found work for additional salespeople had they been available.

Scotchdale and Mount Pleasant both sent big parties while the Mount Pleasant Accommodation brought delegations of shoppers from even distant Somerset county points. The West Penn cars were well filled all day, the morning traffic being to Connellsville on both the main line and other divisions.

There was no halt in the buying at noon and several stores made arrangements for their employees to be served lunch in the store. It was a hard day on the clerks, but the kind they enjoy, one when sales come in a steady stream.

The visitors, too, were well pleased with their bargains. Some of them came to town determined to buy one particular object they had seen advertised, and wound up by taking more than they had anticipated.

The stores will remain open until 6 o'clock this evening. Tomorrow the second

COLOR SCHEME OF GRAY AND PINK.

A charming idea is the color scheme of this plain gray cotton voile with trimming of pink and white. A continuous band of pink and white cotton embroidery outlines the bottom of the sleeve, continues over the shoulder and forms a "Y" shaped neck beneath a yoke, and fastened with tiny pink buttons. The neck and sleeves are piped with pink, the latter being softened by two-inch pleated fall of net. The crushed grille is of pink and gray silk. The skirt is cut in two pieces and is plain except for groups of pink buttons.

FREE PIG IRON.

The Underwood bill provides for a duty of 5% on pig iron. The Senate Finance Committee placed pig iron on the free list. This action was the subject of an earnest protest by Senator Oliver, who pointed out that at least $1 a ton duty was necessary to protect the merchant furnaces of this country against competition from European districts where production costs are lower because of cheaper labor, and who warned the Senate against the impending competition of China with its vast natural resources in iron and coal and its cheap labor.

Whether the placing of the iron on the free list was intended as a blow at the United States Steel Corporation, or whether the Democratic Senators were convinced that the Steel Corporation did not need its pig iron protected, is not material to the issue. The application of the duty was probably composed of a little of both sentiments. It may be said of them that the first is unworthy of the integrity of statesmanship and the latter is creditable to its intelligence.

It is possible that the Steel Corporation can get along without any protection on its pig iron, or on few if any of its finished products, because of its strong industrial position; but the Steel Corporation represents only a portion of the iron and steel trade, the other and the larger portion is composed of smaller manufacturers, and few of these will be able to compete with foreign products on the present basis of labor costs. The enforcement of the Democratic Free Trade policy will undoubtedly close down many merchant furnaces and smaller steel mills, whose workmen will be thrown out of employment and into distress.

There is also the menace of the Orient against which Senator Oliver warns the Senate. We have already barred out of this country Chinese cheap labor. Yet we have the spectacle of the Democratic Congress proposing to admit free of duty into this country the products of that labor.

This is the Democratic statesmanship which tells itself and the country with great frequency and much fervency that its voice is the voice of God because it is the voice of the People, when as a matter of fact it is the voice of a minority representing for the most part discredited and disapproved national policies some of which it forced upon the country threaten to be disastrous.

Yet some of the ambitious but misguided aspirants to political honors would continue to divide the party for the mere gratification of personal vanity or interest unconscious of or indifferent to its frightful cost to the people.

EXPRESS REDUCTIONS.

The express companies of the country were due to have some drastic reduction in their rates, but they were probably not prepared for the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission revising their rates so radically downward that many of them are less than the Parcel Post rates. It may be added that the public is quite as much surprised.

It is unreasonable to suppose that the express companies can compete with the postoffice department in the carriage of small packages, but there have been so many unreasonable things in the express business that in the absence of better information we assume the decision of the commission to have been founded in equity. Time will tell whether or not it is an injustice to the stockholders of the express companies, but inasmuch as the latter have been paying stockholders dividends throughout a long term of years perhaps they can stand the brief jolt of a public experiment. It has always been something of a mystery why express companies were necessary to the transportation of packages, when they furnish nothing but delivery wagons.

Vacations are in full swing, but the industries reformers of the tariff and the bureau of commerce, the breed of statesmanship by the sweat of their brows. The funny part about it is that a decided majority of the people of the country would prefer that Congress adjourn and let well enough alone. The Democratic injustice at Washington is a clear case of misdirected energy.

The business will be looking around Conneltsville on Bargain Day.

Bureau of Finance has turned over to the Borough Treasurer over $700 in hard cash, being the proceeds of his office for the month of July. This officer had better restrain his enthusiasm. He is in danger of being mistaken for the business.

This is Conneltsville Day at Shady Grove, but it will not be allowed to interfere with Bargain Day.

Somerset county furnishes a candidate for Superior Court judge who is advertised as a lawyer, a farmer and a Democrat. His religion is not mentioned, but it will probably be found in case of his election that he will be a decidedly religious person.

Owensdale is now convinced of the serious consequences of drifting.

The foreman who shot up a Lake Erie train for the charge of being drunk or delirious. Whether he was either or both, it is evident that both himself and the traveling public will be better off if he is detained in the violent word for awhile long enough at least to get sober and sensible.

Bathers who have been under the painful necessity of snapping home under cover of darkness will probably be looking up bargains in bathing suits in the Conneltsville stores today.

It is becoming apparent that horse-drawn items must be paid more promptly to save costs and sometimes to save property.

It's a long lane that has no turning, but Henry Lane Wilson wasn't that kind of a lane. He has had a return and a recall.

Grecian robes without stockings will make up the coming tentative garb. If any thoughtless male provider indulges the fond illusion that this is a movement to reduce the high cost of living, he should recall the fact that the smart hats and gowns of the women have gotten the higher their prices have soared.

If everybody was half as good as they pretended the world would be better.

It might be well to remember that all church steeples point to heaven; and the atmosphere isn't crowded with steeples at that.

Governor Tener vetoed the bill requiring that nothing but chemically pure water shall hereafter be used in finer bowls. The Governor probably thought that the Common People would be willing to take a chance on the water when they could rule the bowls.

Colonel Bryan used to tell us that the man should be above the dollar, but he has been trying to get around it ever since.

Persons afflicted with disease will hereafter be barred from employment on dining cars in Pennsylvania, but the itching palm will probably not be classified as prohibitory.

It is intimated that the Federal Government will take up the Pittsburgh Flood Commission's projects for damming the Yough and other streams where the State Government left off. Friendsville may yet become the head of navigation and once more the home of fish tales.

All roads lead to Conneltsville today and tomorrow.

The report of the coroner of Fayette county for the month of July shows an unusual list of fatalities, but the prime factor was Fate rather than the Fourth.

It is to be hoped that the school directors and the doctors will arrive at some agreement whereby the schools of Conneltsville will hereafter have medical inspection.

Pittsburg should either build a highway or let it be constructed by private capital. The highway is needed badly enough.

Tacoma, Wash.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Swash."

Tacoma, Wash., is not an exhortation to wrap up a pack and carry it to your residence. It may sound that way but it refers to one of the most impressive and uncontrollable cities on the Pacific slope—Tacoma, once the rival of Seattle and, according to the Tacoma papers, tomorrow the rival of Chicago.

Tacoma is situated on one of the many vermiform appendages of Puget Sound. Its feet are buried in the mud flats, which are sold periodically to eastern investors, and its head is in the pine forest, 300 feet above. Tacoma slopes gently up out of the water and continues to slope until the tourist gives it up in despair and goes home to seek his London Achilles in arnica.

Tacoma is also situated on three great transcontinental railroad lines and all trains stop there. Most of them not only stop there but disintegrate and go no further. Steamships from a hundred ports too their way up the sound to Tacoma and every year a whole pine forest comes down to the city and is shipped for foreign parts.

Tacoma was first thought of in 1833, and seven years later it had 38,000 people, most of whom lived in pine houses. Tacoma was first modeled in pine like Portland, but has since been built in brick and stone. From 1839 to 1900 Tacoma enjoyed a long refreshing nap while Seattle blazed away with great energy and assumed a commanding lead which still makes the Tacoma man when he discusses it. By 1900 Tacoma had only gained 1,700 additional citizens. Since then it has grown with great fury and now contains 55,000 people, 54,000 of whom will sell a tent stranger a building lot if urged a little.

Tacoma is smaller than Seattle or Portland, but is much more than either. Police regulations forbid discussions of the two cities by Tacoma and Seattle men. The city is remarkably healthy, practically the only occupants of the cemeteries being trav-clers who have come to town and have incautiously alluded to Mount Tacoma as "Mount Ranier."

Tacoma, like other western cities, is up to date, and has the commission form of government, including a recall clause. Tacoma's greatest ambition is to reveal Seattle to about 150,000 population and then pass her in the next census.

Pretty Duchess of Marlborough Now in Politics: She's the New Leader of London Suffragists

Duchess of MARLBOROUGH

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The beautiful Duchess of Marlborough, Countess of Salisbury, is coming to New York in a few days for health. She has given a great deal of time to politics and is now starting a school for the purpose of furthering her political ambitions. The duchess is one of the prominent leaders of the American colony. She recently accepted the presidency of the Women's Municipal party, which was formed to further the cause of women's rights in the various London municipalities. The duchess is not a militant, but she is an ardent suffragist.

signal which should not be allowed to go undetected. A child on whom a rash has broken out should at once be quarantined, especially if there are other children in the family. If a child shows any bad effects from a fall a doctor should be consulted and the child thoroughly examined. The fact that no bones are broken is no proof that other injury has not been sustained. This is one of the cases where an ounce of prevention is worth many pounds of cure.

Plate Baby Can't Push Off the Table.
At last some one has brought out a plate that baby can't push off the table and break into a dozen pieces. This new plate resembles a flat, deep bowl and is attractively decorated with nursery rhymes and Kate Greenaway pictures. Around the lower bottom is fastened a strong wire support that catches under the table edge, the edge of a high chair or tray and that keeps the plate firm.

WILY KING EDWARD I.

Fooled the Rebellious Welsh With the Prince of Wales.

After a lifelong struggle with the Welsh, Edward I. of England sought to ascertain the cause of their constant rebellion and was informed that they would never be content until they had a prince of their own.

The wily old monarch asked them if a prince born in Wales who could not speak a word of English would be satisfactory, and they received the offer with great enthusiasm, presuming that the king meant one of their own flesh and blood.

His queen, about to give birth to a child, was hurried to the famous Caernarvon castle, where 600 years ago Edward II., the first prince of Wales, was born. Thereupon King Edward, carrying the newly born babe on the ramparts of the castle, announced to the multitude, "Here is your prince, born in your own country, who knows no word of English and who, I promise you, shall be reared by a Welsh foster-mother and shall learn your language. Accept you him as your prince?"

In all the six centuries intervening the eldest son of the king of England has been invested and known as the Prince of Wales. In the year 1911 the present Prince of Wales and the future king of England was invested on the same spot as his predecessor 600 years ago.—T. Owen Clunes in National Magazine.

PLAIN AND CHECKED GINGHAM.
The model shown above may be made up attractively in many materials. If a simple morning truck is desired, a plain blue gingham may be used with bordering bands of figured or checked gingham in the same shade. The blouse is fastened into a shallow shoulder yoke and opens in irregular line over a fitted vest of white net. The elbow sleeves are slashed in similar style, displaying a dainty cuff of white net. The skirt has three flounces, each finished on the lower edge by a narrow band of the figured material. A dainty girlish and such ends of Dresden ribbon in shades of blue adds a further "Summer" touch to this dainty frock.

For the Children

Little Son of Captain Scott, the Lost Explorer.

MASTER PETER SCOTT.

Very likely you all remember father or mother a little while ago telling you about Captain Scott and the brave men who went with him to find the south pole.

It does not much matter to you what this south pole really is, except that every one agrees that to find it is about one of the hardest things on earth to do.

Captain Scott and his party did find the pole after months of suffering and danger, but they found it only to lose their lives out in this frozen region. It was a splendid, fine thing to do what these Englishmen did, even if they found out after reaching the pole that another man, Amundsen, had got there ahead of them. The world nevertheless always will be proud of this little company of Englishmen who failed to arrive first at the pole.

The sweet little boy whose picture you see is Peter, Captain Scott's baby son, who waved goodbye to his father when he started for the pole two years ago. Peter missed his father so much that every now and then he would say to his mother, "Isn't it time daddy came home again? He promised he'd come back to us soon."

If you care to know more about Captain Scott and this little boy there is a book written especially for you children which tells the whole story of the expedition.

Conundrums.

Why do Russian soldiers have steel and the French brass buttons on their coats? To fasten them with.

How can you swallow a door? Bolt it. Why is a watch a difficult thing to steal? Because it must be taken off its guard.

Why is an air played by an orchestra like Italian rubbers? Because it is a bind ditty.

An Industrious Child.

Anna Elizabeth Emily Green loved to polish and scrub and clean. Every day and every week as a wee good little girl, she'd work for three.

She polished the knocker right off the door. She scrubbed herself through the pantry floor. She brushed the dog till she made him jump. And washed the cat at the back yard pump.

She rubbed the color quite off the face Of her waxen doll, whose name was Grace. And combed her hair in so stern a way It all came off in a heap one day.

Out in the garden among the flowers Anne Elizabeth raked for hours. Cried when some of them would not grow. "Well, it's a great deal sooner said."

The ladies watched, and they said, "It's clear. Talon like this is wasted here." So they whisked her up in the air one night. And set her to polish the old moon bright.

And there she toils, for Anne has found The moon is terribly large and round. While the moon is so big she isn't quick In trimming his queer old lantern stick.

And then she is told, when the wind is high, To take out a broom and to sweep the sky. And the twinkling stars wouldn't shine so bright.

If Anne did not give them a rub each night. None of her friends have ever seen Anne Elizabeth Emily Green. But an old astronomer one clear day. Saw her scrubbing the Milky way. —Shelia E. Brahm.

Checking it Up to Father. That parents should exercise the greatest care in speaking of family secrets in the presence of little children was proved by the experience of a North avenue resident recently.

The man in question was visiting a maiden aunt, who is extremely stout and very sensitive about it.

A four-year-old boy who accompanied his father looked very carefully at the rotund form of his relative and then inquired, with a friendly smile, "Aunt Myrtle, you don't have to put ashes in the bed to keep from slipping out, do you?"

Then when the man held up his hands in consternation the youngster exclaimed: "There, papa; she says she doesn't." —Youngstown Telegram.

Fun In Space. I dreamed last night that I was present at a committee meeting of the sun, earth, moon and stars. "I'm no coward," said the earth. "No, but you have two great fears," said the sun hotly. "And those are?" "The hemispheres." "You've forgotten the atmosphere," put in the moon. And the comet, who had no business to be there, wagged his tail with joy.

Points for Mothers

Child's Summer Diet Should Be Simple.

In regard to summer meals, simplicity should govern their preparation. Avoid all highly seasoned dishes. Prepare light meals with cooked or uncooked cereals, plenty of vegetables prepared simply, fruits not too ripe or green, with very little meat, indeed, says Dr. Maude Kent in Modern Puerile Magazine. A bit of carefully boiled or baked beef, mutton or fowl once a day is a large meat allowance for a child who is old enough for such foods. The fresh, green vegetables are most wholesome.

Cut down on potatoes in hot weather and always serve them baked or mashed without rich gravy. Soups or broths (all fat removed), with rice and finely cut or chopped vegetables, are especially nourishing. Chua bouillon, too, that comes prepared is a very good addition to the child's menu. An egg once a day, soft boiled or dropped on toast or rice, is a satisfying meal.

All the simple dishes, like bread and cracker puddings, soft custard, blanc-mange and the gelatin desserts, are digestible and nourishing. Children easily learn good food habits, and the things they best love fortunately answer the summer requirements for a diet that is cooling, palatable and satisfying.

Milk is, of course, the summer food staple, but mothers need to remember that it is a hearty food in itself and not a beverage to be used as water to satisfy thirst and added to a full meal. The present demand for "a drink" give pure cool water that is not too cold and give it between meals.

Teach the children that a few sips slowly taken will quench thirst better than a whole glass of water hastily swallowed. With cereals, blanc-mange and bread, milk makes a nourishing meal. One of the best lunches on a hot day is a beaten egg in a glass of cooled milk. The egg lemonade and orangeade are nourishing food drinks also.

When the King of Rome Cried.
Many mothers might take a lesson to heart from the following incident, narrated by one of Napoleon's biographers:

His little son, the famous king of Rome—L'Alphonse, whom Maude Adams portrayed as a young boy a few years ago—was hardly more than a baby. He was in charge of a lady of high birth, who acted as his governess. In addition to gentle birth this woman possessed a true love and thorough sympathy for children. She understood the little king of Rome as no body else did, and in return for her affection and kindness he grew very fond of her.

One day he began to cry, pettishly and rebelliously, and would not stop. The lady ordered the windows closed, the curtains drawn and the candles lighted.

The child looked on in wonder. "What are you doing?" he finally asked.

"I am closing the windows so that the people of France will not know that their little prince cries," said the lady.

The little prince ran to her impulsively. "A thousand pardons, madame," he said in the furthest words in which he had been taught. And he forthwith stopped crying.

His governess understood that an appeal to a child's sense of honor will have more effect than all the scolding or reasoning in the world. Most mothers, although their children are not princes, could at least suggest to their children that the neighbors in want of subjects would hear the crying. An appeal of his sort seldom fails, especially when drawn curtains and lights in the middle of the day have attracted the child's attention and taken his thoughts away from the cause of his sorrow.

What Every Mother Should Know.
Every mother should early learn the appearance of a healthy throat. She can then easily recognize inflammation, enlarged tonsils and other unhealthy conditions. She should also learn to know her child to throat examination.

When a baby's throat soon learns that there is nothing to dread in having a teaspoon or other form of tongue depressor used. As so many of children's serious troubles start in the throat, it is better to be overcautious and to summon a doctor at once. The appearance of a rash is another danger

Hit Them Both.
"You remember old St. Collins, what used to be around here last season, don't you?" remarked the station master at Seaboard.

"You mean the chap that always had a way of doing things differently from any one else?"

"That's the fellow," replied the station master. "Well, he committed suicide 'bout a month ago."

"Why, that's terrible! But did he do that differently too?"

"Differently?" ejaculated the station master. "Why, I should say he did. Say, that fellow went out and bought a couple of quarts of gasoline, drank her down, then lit up his old clay pipe and started smoking. The folks hereabout wanted to have services held over the remains; but, Lor', all we ever found was a section of St.'s old vest that somehow got hitched in a tree. Well, St. was bound to do things different."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Least He Might Do.
Little Fatch was possessed of a most friendly disposition, but had not yet reached the age where she could understand the aliveness that may wrap itself around a wordless intimacy. In fact, she demanded speech, frequent and loving.

One night her brother was studying most assiduously his arithmetic lesson, and after calling to him several times without receiving an answer, she appeared to her father.

"I know," replied Fatch, "but he might at least have said, 'Shut up.'"

Woman's Home Companion.

FRISKY SENATE PAGES.

They Are Great Mimics and Discuss Burlesque Legislation.

They are the greatest mimics in the world. They can take off the idiosyncrasies and humorous peculiarities of the senators to a "T."

Sometimes when the caries is not sitting and too many visitors and page bosses are not around to observe the proceedings the pages themselves go into a solemn senatorial session. One will impersonate the vice president, another the chief clerk, and so on. Various other boys will pretend to be either their favorite senators or the senators of home states. Each boy occupies the seat to which the real senator is entitled.

Bung! goes the vice president's gavel, and the extraordinary session of pages has convened. There is always an argument as to which senator shall be recognized when the regular order of business is reached. Every conceivable current subject is discussed, with a goodly sprinkling of "baseball legislation" which always carries with it a rider by which each page senator shall be entitled to an annual self-renewing pass for all the session's games.

A bill which is almost sure to be introduced is one which proposes to increase the salaries of the page and shorten their hours of duty.—Robert D. Hane in Leslie's Weekly.

CHAPTER IV.

"I am Constance."

SHE ordered coffee and toast while he sat there figuring it out. When the waiter departed he leaned forward and said quite frankly:

"You'll pardon me, I'm sure, but I can't understand how I was so short-sighted as to marry your sister."

"Well, you see, you didn't catch a glimpse of me until after you were married," she rallied. "I was in the Sacred Heart convent, you remember."

"Ah, that explains the oversight. I am considered an unusually discriminating person. Let me see: I married a Miss Fowler, didn't I?"

"Yes, Roxbury—four years ago in London, at St. George's. In Hanover square, at 4 o'clock on a Saturday. Didn't they tell you all that?"

"I don't think they said anything about it being 4 o'clock. I'm glad to know the awful details, believe me. Thanks! Do you know I decided you were an American the instant I saw you in the door? He went on, quite irrelevantly.

"How clever of you, Roxbury!"

"Oh, I say, Miss Fowler, I'm not such an ass as I look—really I'm not. I'm trying to look like—"

"But if you want me to believe you are not the ass you think you look like, careful what you say. Remember I am not Miss Fowler to you. I am Constance—somebody's Constance. Can you remember that, Roxbury?"

He drew a long breath. "Oh, I say, Constance, I'd much rather be plain Brock to you."

"Please don't forget that I am doing this for my sister, not for myself by any manner of means," she said stiffly. He flushed painfully, conscious of the rebuke.

"Please overlook my faults for the time being," he said. "I'll do better. You see, I've been rather overcome by the sense of my own importance. I'm not used to being the head of an establishment. It has dared me. A great many things have happened to me since I left the Guro de l'Est last night."

He was considerably in no way referring to his unhappy mode of traveling. "For instance, I've completely lost my head." He might have said that, but that would have sounded commonplace and earthy.

"One does, you know, when he loses his identity," she said sympathetically. "Edith says you are slipping and all that sort of thing," she went on hurriedly, in perfect mimicry. "You come very highly recommended as a brother-in-law."

"Are you to be with us until the end of the play?"

"Yes, The Rodneys are my friends, not Edith's. Katherine Rodney was in the convent with me. We see a great deal of each other. I'm sure you will like her. Everybody falls dreadfully in love with her."

"How very amiable of you to permit it," he protested gallantly. "I'm sure I shall enjoy falling in love. Which reminds me that I've never had a sister-in-law. That's very nice, I'm told. It's odd that Modcroft didn't tell me about you. Would you mind advancing a bit of general information about yourself—and, may I say, about my family in general? It may come handy."

"I feel as though I had known you for years," she said, frankly returning his gaze. She leaned forward, her elbows on the table, her chin in her hands. "I'm merely Edith's sister. We live in Paris—that is, father and I. I'm three years younger than Edith. Of course you know how old your wife is, so we won't dwell upon that. You don't? Then I'd demand it of her. I haven't been in Philadelphia since I was seven, and that's ages ago. I have no mother, and father is off in South America on business. So you see little sister has to tag after big sister. Oh!" She interrupted the recital with an abrupt change of manner. "I'm so sorry you've finished your coffee. Now you'll have to go. Roxbury always does."

"But I haven't finished," he exclaimed eagerly. "I'm going to have three or four more pots. You have no idea how—"

"It's all right, then," she said, with her most radiant smile. "Well, Edith asked me to come to London for the season. The Rodneys were in Paris at the time, however, and they asked me to join them for a fortnight in the Tyrol. When I said that I was off for a visit with them, you, I mean—they insisted that you all should come too. They are connections in a way, don't you see? So we accepted. And here we are."

"You don't, by any chance, happen to be engaged to be married, or anything of that sort?" he ventured.

"I think they should have prepared me for this," growled he. "Is it supposed to be mine? Does—does Mrs. Modcroft know about it?"

"You mean about the baby, sir? Of course she does. It's hers. Please don't look so odd, sir. My word, sir, I didn't know you didn't know it, did I? I wasn't told, was I, O'Brien? There, sir, you see! Mrs. Modcroft said I was to bring Tootles in to you, sir. She said—"

"Tootles?" murmured Brock. "Tootles and Raggles. I dare say there's a distinction without much of a difference. Are you Burton?"

"Yes, Mr. Modcroft. The nurse. Won't you take baby for a minute, sir? Just to get acquainted and for appearance's sake." She whispered the well-meant entreaty. Brock, now well into the spirit of the situation, obligingly extended his arms. The baby set up a lusty howl of aversion.

"For God's sake, take him back to his mother!" growled Brock hastily. "He doesn't like strangers! Take him away!"

"It isn't a he, sir," whispered the maid as the nurse prepared to beat a hasty retreat with the Modcroft offspring. "It's a her, sir."

Brock's face was a study in perplexity as they hurried from the car. "By George!" he muttered. "What next?"

That which did come next was even more amazing than the unexpected advent of Tootles. He barely had recovered his equanimity—with his coffee—when a young lady entered the car. That of itself was not much to speak of, but what followed was something that not even he could have dreamed of if he had been given the chance. He afterward recalled in some distress of mind that his second quick glance at the newcomer developed into little less than a rude stare of admiration. Small wonder, let it be advanced in his defense.

She was astoundingly fair to look upon. Jealously, it might be said, with some support to the collective. Moreover, she was looking directly into his eyes from her unstable position near the door. What was more, a shy, even unobtrusive, smile crept into her face as her glance caught his. Never had he seen a more exquisite face than hers. Never had he looked upon a more perfect picture of grace and loveliness and—yes—sweetness. She was smiling with unmistakable friendliness and recognition, and yet he could have sworn he had not seen her before in his life. As if he could have forgotten such a face! A sudden sense of enchantment swept over him, indescribable yet delicious.

She was coming toward him, still smiling shyly, her lips parted, as if she were breathing quickly from fear or another emotion. He set down his coffee cup without regard to taste or direction, his gaze fixed upon the trim, slender figure in blue. He now saw that her dark eyes were filled with a soft sweetness that belied her brave smile. A delicate pink had come into her clear, high-bred face. The hesitancy of the gentleman enveloped her with a mantle that shielded her from any suspicion of boldness. Brock struggled to his feet, amazement written in his face.

"Good morning, Roxbury," she said in the most impersonal of greetings, her smile deepened as the blankness increased in his face. In the most casual manner of fact manner she appropriated the chair across the table from him. "Please sit down, Rox."

He sat down abruptly. For a single tense, abashed moment they looked searchingly into each other's eyes. "Are you Raggles?" he asked politely.

"You poor man!" she cried, agitated. "Raggles is Edith's French poodle. Has no one told you of the poodle?" She had whispered this. He began to adore her at that very moment, a circumstance well worth remembering.

"No one has told me of you, for that matter," he apologized, thrilling with a delight such as he had never known before. "Would you mind whispering to me just who you are? Am I supposed to be your father—or what?"

"It is all so delightfully casual, isn't it?" she said. "I daresay they forget to tell you that you are a man of family. Didn't they mention me in any way at all?" She pouted very prettily.

"No, they ignored you and Raggles and Tootles. Are there any more in your family that I haven't met?"

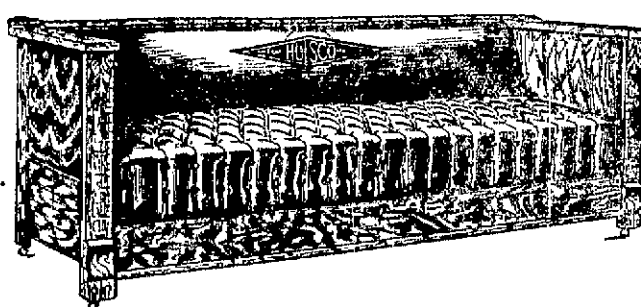

"You see, we are at the station quite a bit ahead of Edith. That's how you happened to miss meeting us. We saw you there, however. I recognized you by your clothes. You seemed very unhappy. Oh, I forgot! You wanted to know who I am. Well, I am your sister-in-law."

"Don't crush me! It's only as a safeguard, you know. People may ask questions."

"You are not obliged to answer them, Roxbury," she said. The flush had deepened in her cheek. It convinced him that she was in love—and engaged. He experienced a queer sinking of the heart. "You can say that you don't know, if any one should be so rude as to ask." Suddenly she caught her breath and stared at him in a sort of panic. "Heavens," she whispered.

He experienced a remarkable change of front in respect to Roxbury Modcroft before the breakfast was over. It may have been due to the spell of her eyes or to the call of her voice, but it remained an unchallenged fact that he no longer thought of Modcroft as a stupid blunderer. Instead he had come to regard him as a good and respectable Samaritan. All of which goes to prove that a divinity shapes our ends, though how them how we may.

"I'm sure we shall get on famously," he said, as she signified her desire to return to the compartment. "I've always longed for a nice, agreeable sister-in-law."

After mission in life, up to a certain stage, is to make the man appreciate the fact that he has, after all, been snapped up by a small but deserving family," she said blithely. "It is also her duty to pour oil on troubled waters and strew flowers along the common highway, so long as her kind offices are not resented. By the way, Roxbury, I am now about to preserve you from further reproaches. You have forgotten to order coffee and rolls for your wife."

"Great Scott! So I have! It's 9 o'clock!" He ordered the coffee and rolls to be sent in at once. "I hope she hasn't starved to death!"

"My dear Roxbury," she said sternly. "I must take you under my wing. You have much to accomplish in the next twenty-four hours, not the least of your duties being the subjugation of Tootles and Raggles. Tootles is fifteen months old. It may interest you to know. We can't afford to have Tootles scream with terror every time she sees you, and it would be most unfortunate if Raggles should growl and snap at you as he does at all suspicious strangers. Once in awhile he bites, too. Do you like babies?"

"Yes, I—I think I do," he said doubtfully. "I daresay I could cultivate a taste for 'em, but I say," with eager eagerness, "I love dogs!"

"It may be distinctly in your favor that Raggles loathes the real Roxbury. He growls every time that Roxbury kisses

Edith."

"Has he ever bitten Roxbury for it?"

"No," Roxbury said. "But Roxbury has had to kick him on several occasions."

"How very tiresome—to kick and kick at the same time!"

"Raggles is very jealous, you understand."

"That's more than I can say for dear old Roxbury. But I'll try to anticipate Raggles by compelling Edith to keep her distance," he said, scowling darkly. "Has it not occurred to you that Tootles will be pretty—or much of a nuisance when it comes to mountain climbing?" He felt his way carefully in saying this.

"Oh, dear me, Roxbury! Would you have left the poor little darling at home—an all that dreadful heat?"

"I'm sure I couldn't have been blamed for leaving her at home," he protested. "She didn't exist until half an hour ago. Heavens, how they do spring up!"

The remainder of Brock's day was spent in getting acquainted with his family, or rather, his menage. There were habits and foibles, demands and restrictions that he had to adapt himself to with unvarying benignity. He made a friend of Raggles without half trying. Dogs always took to him, he admitted modestly. Tootles was less vulnerable. She howled consistently at each of his first half dozen advances. His courage began to wane with shocking rapidity. His next half-hearted advances were in reality inglorious retreats. Spurred on by the sustaining Constance, he stood by his guns and at last was gratified to see faint signs of surrender. By midday he had conquered. Tootles permitted him to carry her up and down the station platform (she was too young to realize the risk she ran). Edith and Constance, with the beaming nurse and O'Brien, applauded warmly when he returned from his first promenade, bearing Tootles and proudly heeled by Raggles. Good mothers in the crowd of hurrying travelers found time to look upon him and smile, as if to say, "What a nice man!" He could almost hear them saying it, which no doubt accounted for the intense ruddiness of his cheeks.

"Do you ever spank her?" he demanded once of Mrs. Modcroft after Tootles had brought tears to his eyes with a potent attack upon his nose. She caught the light of danger in his gray eyes and hastily snatched the offending Tootles from his arms.

Miss Fowler kept him constantly at work with his eyes and his English, neither of which he was managing well enough to please her critical estimate. In fact, he labored all day with the persistence, if not the sublimity, of a hard-driven slave. He did not have time to become tired. There was always something new to be done or learned or unlearned; his day was full to overflowing. He was a man of family.

The wife of his bosom was tranquilly itself. She was enjoying herself. When not amusing herself by watching Brock's misfortunes she was napping or reading or sending out for cool drinks. With all the selfishness of a dutiful wife she was content to shift responsibilities upon that ever convenient and useful creature—a detached sister.

Brock sent telegrams for her from cities along the way—Ulm, Munich, Salzburg and others—all meant for the real Roxbury in London, but sent to a fictitious being in Great Russell street, the same having been agreed upon by at least two of the conspirators. It mattered little that she repeated herself monotonously in regard to the state of health of herself and Tootles. Roxbury would doubtless enjoy the protracted happiness brought on by these dispatches, even though they got him out of bed or missed him in a bunch the next day. He may also have been gratified to hear from Munich that Roxbury was perfectly lovely. She said in the course of her longest dispatch that she was so glad that the baby was getting to like her father more and more as the day wore on.

At one station Brock narrowly escaped missing the train. He swung himself aboard as the cars were rolling out of the sheds. As he sank, hot and exhausted, into the seat opposite his wife and her sister the former looked up from her book, yawning over so faintly, and asked:

"Are you enjoying your honeymoon, Roxbury?"

"Immense!" he exclaimed, but not until he had searched for and caught Constance's truant gaze. "Aren't we?" he asked of Miss Fowler, his eyes dancing. She smiled encouragingly.

"I think you are such a nice man to have about," commented Mrs. Modcroft, this time yawning freely and stretching her fine young arms in the luxury of home contentment.

Brock went to bed early in Vienna that night, tired but happy, caring not what the morrow brought forth so long as it continued to provide him with a sister-in-law and a wife who was devoted to another man.
